MANCHESTER – Do you have great ideas for news stories or magazine features, but don't know how or where to get them published?

The Nackey S. Loeb School of Communications is presenting a Freelance Writing workshop on April 8 with some answers.

Instructor Beth LaMontagne Hall will explore how to target publications that use freelance work, how to approach editors successfully, how to structure writing pieces to meet the publication's needs and how to advance to bigger and better publications. Balancing multiple assignments, determining how much to charge and ensuring you are paid will also be discussed. Students will receive links to online resources used by full-time freelancers to find work and will have the opportunity to present story ideas and receive tips on how best to pitch them to editors.

The class also will include a discussion with editors Rick Broussard of New Hampshire Magazine and Jeff Feingold of New Hampshire Business Review, whose publications use freelance writers.

Beth LaMontagne Hall is editor-in-chief of BLH Writing Solutions, a contract writing company based in Portsmouth. She is a former City Hall reporter and columnist for the New Hampshire Union Leader. Beth has worked as a full-time freelance writer for publications including Yankee Magazine; Campaigns and Elections Magazine in Washington, DC; The Associated Press; and New Hampshire Business Review.

The workshop runs 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. on April 8 and costs $50, including lunch. Register at www.loebschool.org or call 627-0005.
