Loeb School offers workshop on photography for public relations

MANCHESTER - The Nackey S. Loeb School of Communications is offering a one-day workshop designed to help public relations photographs land on the web and in the paper, not in the trash.

Taking Public Relations Photos will be presented at the school in Manchester on July 10, from 9 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.

Award-winning photography instructor Geoff Forester will offer proven suggestions on how to take public relations photos that stand out and enhance any news release. The workshop will include camera basics, taking good photos and selecting photos that best tell your story.

The registration fee of $40 includes lunch.

Geoff Forester has been a photojournalist for nearly 30 at four newspapers. In 1994, he was named Photographer of the Year by the New Hampshire Photojournalists Association. He also has been a photo editor at the Concord Monitor and The Boston Globe and has taught photography at Boston University, the New Hampshire Institute of Art and the Loeb School.
